

SCENARIO 1

A new student joined your class this week. At recess, he's standing by himself at the edge of the field, not sure what to do.

SCENARIO 2

A friend fell at recess and skinned his knee. He's crying more from being startled than really hurt, and it's just a small scrape.

SCENARIO 3

At recess, a kid trips running across the blacktop and lands hard on his wrist. He says it hurts a lot and it's already starting to swell.

SCENARIO 4

A good neighborhood friend has seemed unusually quiet and down for a couple of days, and said something that worried you — like that he doesn't think anyone would notice if he wasn't around.

SCENARIO 5

You are waiting for the bus in the morning and an adult you don't know keeps talking to you and the other kids. This person offers you something like a granola bar, or a ride to school.

SCENARIO 6

You notice the same kid sitting alone at lunch every day this week. Nobody's being mean to him, they just haven't included him.

SCENARIO 7

Your teacher explains a math problem to the whole class and you still don't understand it, even after she moves on to the next thing.

SCENARIO 8

A couple of kids have been teasing you specifically, more than once, and it's starting to really bother you.

Who Do You Turn To?

Team must discuss and agree:

- Do you handle it yourself, or do you need help?
- If you need help, who do you go to?
- You must agree on a WHY for each decision.
